Language Assessment in Practice: Part 1. Bachman, L. and Palmer, A. (2010) Language Assessment in Practice. Oxford: Oxford University Press. This is a detailed, exhaustive guide to developing and using language assessments. I learned a lot from it about all stages of the language assessment process, including a lot of useful theoretical and practical knowledge about issues surrounding development, administration, and scoring of language assessments.

The Bachman and Palmer model of the characteristics of test tasks shows how much more advanced testing theory and thinking has become over the years, as testers have agonised over their test methods. Yet SLA researchers and other applied linguists often use techniques for data elicitation that have long been questioned in testing.

The language is simple. It is well organized. A suggestion is that, read this book after you reading Language Testing in Practice by Bachman & Palmer also. I finished both and I felt like they complement each other pretty well, since Language Testing in Practice talks about mainly the six usefulness criteria and other important concept about SLA and this book provides a general framework for SLA. I would say this book is macro and the other is micro. Definitely I will but other books written ...
