Baharat is a popular spice blend in Northern Africa. There is no true recipe for this blend, as it usually varies from family to family and from region to region, but it does usually have black pepper, paprika, and cumin in it in some amount. La Kama is a blend used most commonly in soups and stews, but it is especially used in Harira. This is a meat-based soup that is served as an appetizer or a small snack and is usually accompanied by a hard-boiled egg.

Blackening Seasoning. This flavorful cajun favorite is a mixture of paprika, garlic, thyme, oregano, and black, white, and cayenne peppers. Meat and fish are usually coated in the seasoning and then seared until "blackened" in a hot cast iron skillet. Rather than being burned until black, the paprika, which turns a deep reddish-black color when seared, is responsible for the blackening action.

Sprinkle in a touch of berbere, a North African spice blend of cayenne, paprika, urfa chile, coriander, cardamom, ginger and fenugreek. This mix of spices adds heat but also some complexity. Sub it in recipes that call for a pinch of cayenne or red pepper flakes. A dash over sauteed veggies is a great way to start with this spice.
